
The question (states that the badge is awarded when you answer with the correct translation of "rag" as a verb, but the only answers posted are translations of the plural form. My question is: What exactly constitutes a "correct" translation of "rag" as a verb? This seems like a fairly trivial question to me but I guess since it was marked as a duplicate of a very old question (question A) I didn't want to waste anyone's time. I've asked about this before but never got any response. Is this a bug or is it just a minor ambiguity in the badge description? A: I've written a simple script that will translate the words from one language to the other, and as part of that I convert the word to its plural form. This is how it works: Find the word rag in the dictionary (here is an example from French to English) Convert it to its plural form Convert the word from the English to the target language Search for the translation of the word in the target language dictionary and output the translation of the word and its plural form, separated by a comma If that translation does not exist in the target language dictionary, the word is accepted as a right translation. Currently, it is not possible to match the translation of the word rag in the dictionary (a few words get accepted), so this solution will definitely not be perfect (it will only consider one form of the plural, and not all of them). This could be improved a lot. For example, even if it can match the dictionary 6d1f23a050
