I have a late 2008 Macbook Pro (15"), which I received with OS X 10.5.8 and has been replaced with OS X 10.9.2. When I did a clean install of the OS X 10.9.2, I opted to use a Time Machine backup. In hindsight, this isn't really a Time Machine backup (if it had been a Time Machine backup, it would have made a copy of the Time Machine, right?), but it still worked to backup the system. However, now I've failed to use the latest backup I have, which has an issue and I need to repair the disk. Should I have tried to repair the disk instead of restoring the backup? A: Absolutely not, because a Time Machine backup is not a backup of the system. A backup is of the files in the folder your Time Machine uses. However, when you run the Time Machine, the system itself is saved. The folder contains files from the very beginning of the backup. The Time Machine is not a restore tool, but a backup system. If you use it correctly, you won't lose your data. Because of this you should ALWAYS use the 'utilities' in the Finder to run the Time Machine.
