Tag Archives: DNS I'm currently doing a course called 'networking', and we are trying to do an experimental course on the history of the internet (well, to be truthful, we're given a few options to choose from and this is the one we're sticking with, at the moment). Anyway, I thought I'd mention a few of the sites and historic facts that I've found along the way. It's going to be an interesting series of notes, I'm sure. - The first actual website was online in August 1991, courtesy of Tim Berners-Lee. It was named The World Wide Web — more or less a blank page, with links to other pages. - The first web servers were created by Paul Mockapetris, which was developed by him at the MIT AI Lab. This wasn't by any means the first server, as the Almanac of the World Wide Web stated that at least two web servers were first conceived in 1981: at the Stanford AI Lab and at the NASA Space Center (they got the name Stanford University from a NASA computer system called STANFORD, a fact that I was not aware of until I did my course on history of the internet). - The first HTTP web server was one of the earliest commercially available web servers. It was a RED HAT package which became available in 1993, and was the first web server which was open-source and could be freely shared. It came out 2 years before the Mosaic, and was given the name Apache, which is a Apache Foundation project. - The first web browser was also started in 1991, more or less on the same day as the first web server. It was called N
